In April, BPI Alternative drop 42bps taking YTD performance to -0.06%. The main contribution of the month came from the networks sub-sector with +25bps due to the outperformance of our longs Enagas and RENE vs our short in Redeia. At the end of April, Spain and Portugal were hit by an electricity blackout caused by a rare imbalance in power frequencies and investors are worried that Redeia may face potential penalties and court claims. The good performance of this sub-sector was not enough to put Utilities contribution on positive ground as our long in Acciona Energia (ANE) continued to strongly underperform our short in Acciona as power prices continue to be at very low levels hurting ANE's profitability. The main detractor was the Telecoms sector with -34bps as our short in Telefonica outperformed our long in NOS. In the 1Q25, it was NOS that outperformed but in April its share price was penalized with the news that competitive landscape was becoming more aggressive and that the newcomer Digi was starting to do advertising on tv. On Telefonica's side, the company announced the sale of its subsidiary in Peru for €1mn but the buyer will assume the tax liabilities with the Peru's tax authorities. There was also news that Telefonica was seeking to dispose of other subsidiaries in Latam such as Mexico, Chile or Ecuador. As in March, the second main detractor were the air exposed stocks with -18bps and this time the main responsible was our long in HBX. In a context of market volatility, investors seem to be less keen on holding positions in a company that has recently come to the market and for that reason has less track record. We have made several changes in the portfolio during the month. After some correction on Merlin's share price, we reverted Merlin to long and Colonial to short as we thought that the discount to GAV had become more interesting especially considering its strong growth prospects in the next few years. We reverted Acerinox to long vs selling position in other cyclical/commodities stocks as its share price had a strong decline with US tariffs announcement despite being one of the main beneficiaries with a more protectionist agenda in the US. Lastly, we reverted Logista to long selling other defensive stocks as its potential upside became relatively more interesting in a context of economic and FX uncertainty.
