

- Tuesday's session opened September on a risk-off note. The re-escalation of U.S.-Iran tensions continued to fuel a rally in oil and gas prices, adding pressure to market-based inflation expectations and reinforcing market-implied probabilities of Fed and ECB rate hikes.
- Equities fell broadly across Europe and the U.S., with technology and cyclical stocks leading the decline. Sovereign yields surged to multi-year highs, but euro area peripheral spreads were little changed. In FX markets, the dollar firmed on rising rate expectations, pressuring the euro, sterling, and the yen.
- On the data front, euro area headline inflation accelerated to 3.3% yoy in August due to higher energy prices, while core inflation edged down to 2.4%. The U.S. ISM manufacturing slowed to 54.6 points in August, a figure consistent with expanding output but that was also accompanied by signals of broadening price pressures.
