Daily Report 11-Nov-2026

- US inflation triggers a sharp repricing of Fed expectations. October CPI surprised to the upside, with headline inflation rising 0.4% month-on-month and core inflation increasing 0.3%. Markets fully priced in a 25bp Fed rate hike in December, while assigning some probability to a larger move. Against this backdrop, the 2-year Treasury registered its largest daily increase since April 2025.
- US equities declined, as the rise in sovereign yields following the inflation release weighed on risk sentiment. The dollar strengthened by 0.6%, while gold fell 2.6% to around $4,030/oz.
- Oil prices remain under pressure amid signs of de-escalation in the Middle East. Brent crude fell below $90/bbl during the session, for the first time since August, as expectations of a diplomatic resolution to the US-Iran conflict increased and concerns over potential supply disruptions eased. Meanwhile, TTF gas prices rose further, reflecting continued concerns over tight supply conditions ahead of the European winter heating season
